"ALIAS MARY FLYNN"

Synopsis

Nancy, "Alias Mary Flynn", daughter of the Underworld, who has had to battle Life all the way and has unthinkingly followed the Trail of the Crooks, is returning from a successful "job" with jewels of great value in her pocket when a disgruntled pal who has made love to her and been rejected, informs the police of her whereabouts. In a race with the three motorcycle cops who are chasing her, Nancy's auto is wrecked; she is wounded by police bullets, but makes her get-away. Seeing John Regan, a distinguished looking citizen leaving his club, she attaches herself to him and slips the jewels in his pocket just as the cops round the corner, Regan protects the girl, and takes her to his home where his kindness and understanding quickly break down the barrier of her sophistication and hardness and accomplish her moral regeneration.

Gegan's son, Tim is district attorney in an adjoining state; a young man who can see no compromise with law. To him a thing is legal or it isn't legal. Regan becomes involved with Forbes, a wealthy collector and a political power, in the theft of the crown jewels from a little European kingdom. Forbes knows that certain chapters in Regan's past will not bear inspection, and he forces the latter to agree to accept the jewels temporarily; because crooks are on his trail and he is unable to take them himself. Mary has been told of this; and to save her benefactor and the father of the boy she loves from possible disgrace she insists on getting the jewels herself back to Regan's house. Then she leaves; expecting never to see either father or son again.

In delivering the jewels to Forbes, Regan is trailed by Picadilly Charley and Dupree, Forbes' crooked secretary who is working with Charley. Forbes is whot by Charley, who escapes after a fight in the dark, and Regan is accused and convicted of the crime. Mary returns to Tim, who is aghast at his misfortune, and together they strive to set things right. Picadilly Charley, unable to locate the missing grown jewels, haunts the Regan neighborhood. At a darkened window Regan sees the face of Charley and recognizes him as the man who shot Forbes in the darkened library. Charley makes a getaway. Mary, searching Forbes' home for the jewels on the theory that the murderer will return there, encounters both Dupree and Charley. Playing one off against the other, she finally gets the evidence she is looking for; clears Regan's name and saves Tim from humiliation and disgrace.
